Description

This is a bronze statue of Apollo. His upper torso is bare except for a small strap over his shoulders. His hair is curly and thick and seems to be springing off his head. He looks over to the left side. His left hand is on his chest, his right holds something (unknown) down by his side. His lower body is draped with fabric knotted at the center. Instead of legs, there is a square, fluted column. The base supporting the statue has a coat of arms on all four sides of the square: it is shaped like a circle with the left half as an animal. The right half is divided into two pictures: the top seems to be an eagle or hawk, and the bottom depicts a
